

Hope T. Jackson, MD, FACS

Dr. Hope T. Jackson is an assistant professor of surgery and associate surgery clerkship director at the George Washington University School of Medicine & Health Sciences. Dr. Jackson completed her fellowship in minimally invasive foregut and bariatric surgery at the University of Washington in Seattle, Washington. She completed her undergraduate and medical studies at Emory University and the George Washington University School of Medicine and Health Sciences.

Dr. Jackson's clinical interests include bariatric surgery, flexible endoscopy and benign foregut disease. She has presented at national meetings, published in peer reviewed medical journals and authored book chapters in these areas. She has been recognized for excellence in clinical care, teaching, research and humanism by GW during her training and she was selected as a 2017 40 under 40 Leader in Minority Health. This award is given annually by the National Minority Quality Forum and recognizes leaders who are making a difference in healthcare and have the potential to positively impact minority communities.

Dr. Jackson is an active member of the American College of Surgeons and was recently inducted as a Fellow of the college October 2019. She is also an active member of the Society of Gastrointestinal and Endoscopic Surgeons (SAGES) and the Society of Black Academic Surgeons (SBAS), serving as the chair of the SBAS Informatics Committee. Her additional interests include graduate medical education, clinical outcomes research and medical communications.